Joseph's Workbench

As I promised in a previous column, here is my list of my top 6 religious movies, along with two honorable mentions. Just like with my previous Christmas movie list, this list is only my favorites, your list may differ. Any of these would make good Lenten viewing at home. I also recommend listening to Handel's Messiah oratorio either via a recorded concert or a streaming video performance, and yes, you can listen to the Hallelujah Chorus during Lent! We just can't play it at Mass until Easter.

Going My Way This 1944 movie won Best Picture at the Oscars as well as Best Actor for the star, Bing Crosby, and Best Supporting Actor for his costar, Barry Fitzgerald. Crosby plays a troubleshooting priest, Father O'Malley, assigned to the struggling parish, St. Dominic's, whose pastor, Fr. Fitzgibbon (Barry Fitzgerald), needs some help. Father O'Malley's kindness, singing, and light touch with street toughs, a runaway young woman, and Father Fitzgibbon himself, make this a touching, uplifting comedy. "Too-Ra-Loo-Ra-Loo-Ral" and "Swinging On a Star" are two of the songs that light up this wonderful movie. Any resemblance between me and Fr. Fitzgibbon, and Deacon Nick and Fr. O'Malley (Bing Crosby), is purely coincidental! The movie is rated G and available on many streaming platforms and on DVD.

The Mission Based on a famous series of Jesuit missions that contained thousands of Indians in South America and their elimination by Spain and Portugal in the 1750's, this beautiful movie asks what is the proper Christian response to injustice. Jeremy Irons plays Father Gabriel, a successful missionary and pacifist, Robert De Niro is Rodrigo, a new Jesuit and former soldier and slaver, who believes in violent resistance. Liam Neeson and Fr. Daniel Berrigan, a famous Jesuit peace activist and Syracusan, play bit parts. My favorite actor, however, is the actor Ray McAnally, who portrays Cardinal Altamirano, sent by the Pope to assure a peaceful handover of the missions. The themes and the remarkable visual impact of this film stay with you. This is rated PG and there is violence and nudity.

The Ten Commandments Although this was made in 1956 its special effects still hold up well, perhaps because they used real effects, like giant waves of water, when shooting the famous parting of the Red Sea. This is, of course, the story of Exodus and Moses and the escape of the people of Israel from slavery in Egypt. They don't make them like this anymore, this Hollywood spectacle, directed by the famous Cecil B. DeMille, stars Charlton Heston as Moses, Yul Brynner as Pharaoh Rameses, and Yvonne De Carlo, as Moses's wife, Sephora, and many other famous Hollywood greats. My favorite bit of casting, however, is Edward G. Robinson, as Dathan, an opponent of Moses. Robinson was most famous for playing gangsters in movies like "Little Caesar" ("Mother of Mercy, is this the end of Rico!?"), and he adds a bit of gangster toughness to his lines. At 220 minutes it's long, but it has an intermission, and is worth every minute, it's rated G and is available on streaming, DVD and Blu-Ray.

The Song of Bernadette The Virgin Mary has appeared to many young people over the centuries. Mary's appearances to Bernadette in Lourdes, France, were not welcome by everyone. There is the simple disbelief that Mary would appear to a young girl who couldn't read and was from one of the poorest families in town. The authorities, even the parish priest, looked on Bernadette as a troublemaker. Although Bernadette's pastor came to believe her, the authorities were only interested in getting her to stop. This movie captures the spirit of Bernadette's simple but wise personality, and her heroic truth telling that gave hope to many. This 1943 film is filled with great performances and gets to the heart of the message of Lourdes. Available on streaming and DVD.

A Man for All Seasons This is one of my favorite films of all time. In this 1966 film Paul Scofield plays Sir Thomas More, a politician, lawyer, writer, scholar and Catholic who serves King Henry VIII. How can he survive without sacrificing his conscience or his life? The movie shows how the personal and the political are handled differently by each character. For More, he simply wants to be left alone to follow his conscience before God, for others he must submit, his silence is not enough. Paul Scofield plays More, Robert Shaw is King Henry, and Leo McKern is wonderful as Thomas Cromwell, Henry's enforcer. Available on streaming and DVD.

The Passion of the Christ Premiering on Ash Wednesday, 2004, this was one of the most popular religious films ever. Jim Caviezel plays Jesus, and the action is from Holy Thursday through Good Friday, with flashbacks and a short ending on Easter Sunday. The film is in Latin and Aramaic (and some Hebrew) with English subtitles. Anyone who has prayed the Sorrowful Mysteries of the Rosary or the Stations of the Cross will be familiar with this story. The movie is filled with graphic violence, showing the suffering of Jesus unflinchingly. It is, however, a wonderful depiction of the love of Jesus. Available on streaming, DVD and Blu-ray.

The Prince of Egypt This honorable mention from 1998 is a musical cartoon of the story of Moses, beginning with his life in Egypt. It is well done and accessible to children. Available on streaming and DVD.

The Sound of Music My second honorable mention is one of the most popular films ever. In 1965 this musical film took the USA and the world by storm! The tale of Maria, the failed nun, and Captain Von Trapp and his wild tribe of children is “based on a true story” as they say. Maria Von Trapp’s memoirs are the basis for the story, but many details are changed or added for dramatic effect. Perhaps it’s a stretch to call this a “religious” movie, but the song “Climb Every Mountain,” sung by the Mother Abbess, Peggy Wood, certainly shows a spiritual side to the movie, as does the captain’s resistance to Nazism. Available on streaming and DVD.

I hope you can see a few of these films this Lent!

Heart speaks to heart,
Fr. Rob Hyde
